Afghanistan Public Health Network, created by a group of Afghan public health students in January 2010, is a virtual network of more than 130 Afghan and non-Afghan public health professionals. The main aim of this group is to create discussion around public health issues in Afghanistan, exchange information and academic papers regarding public health and advocate for better health for all Afghans and people around the world. Conducting regular journal clubs about Afghanistan Public Health is one of the main strategies towards achieving its goals. Continuous communication through social networking websites such as Google Groups, Facebook and LinkedIn.
